

why do you need a transcript proofreader?

time

We all only have so many hours in the day. Between taking down a job, scoping it, proofing it, submitting it, and all the stuff in between (you know, eating and sleeping and being with family), it can be hard to get everything done.

With me on your team, your time goes further without having to sacrifice what's important to you.

reputation

Your job is tough, and there are millions of details to consider. Too many mistakes in your transcript can quickly turn into trouble. You've read through it so many times that your eyes are stinging and the words are fuzzy.

So why not have a fresh pair of eyes take a peek?

peace of mind

In all honesty, having someone else to assist you when the going gets tough just feels good. I make a great teammate, and I'm ready to help make your work shine.

expertise

In addition to years of experience in editorial work, I am a proud graduate of Transcript Proofreading: Theory and Practice, currently the only course specifically geared to proofreading for court reporters. I also use and am very familiar with the following resources:

- Lillian Morson's English Guide for Court Reporters
- Margie Wakeman Wells's Bad Grammar/Good Punctuation
- The Gregg Manual, 10th Edition
- Merriam-Webster Dictionary
